THOUGHTS FOR SOWING

STONE-FACED

I have set my face like flint... Isaiah 50:7

Do you ever think about the immense courage of Jesus? Having a true human nature (Hebrews 2:5-18), his inner strength is remarkable, particularly during the last week of his life on earth. Jesus' courage has many of the characteristics of the "suffering servant" in the Book of Isaiah. Today, his inner strength is compared to that of flint, an extremely hard stone. Jesus knew what he was facing in those final days. He could easily have slipped through the crowds as he had done previously when in life-threatening danger and escaped the humility and torture of being on the cross. But this time, he deliberately goes toward his death with profound bravery, giving himself trustingly into the arms of his Abba. We can learn from the courage of Jesus and draw on our inner resiliency when in need. We can also place ourselves in the Holy One's care. With God's grace, we, too, can "set our face like flint" when facing daunting circumstances.
